Detail Introduction :

Are frozen leeks good?

Leeks do freeze well. As we've mentioned many times already, blanching is the key element. If you don't blanch your leeks, then you will notice the flavour degrade quite rapidly. If, however, you do blanch them, then you'll find leeks freeze particularly well and will last for an extended period of time.

What can I do with frozen leeks?

These leeks in slices are ready to cook without any additional preparation. Already sorted and trimmed before being cut into slices then frozen, they are perfect in a soup, to cook in pie, or simmer with other vegetables.
