

In 2018, Chinese asparagus will usher in the peak export season

Detail Introduction :

Under normal weather conditions, a new round of asparagus production will kick off in April this year and will reach its peak around June. Asparagus production in Heze, Shandong will reach about 60,000 tons, an increase of about 10% over last year. Considering the supply and shortage of frozen asparagus in European markets, according to my expectation, China's frozen asparagus will have a good export performance in the new season. " I said.

"In 2017, there was a shortage of asparagus in various countries in Europe, such as Germany, Spain, and other countries. This is mainly due to, on the one hand, being limited the growing environment, the asparagus planted in Europe is very limited. On the other hand, many producing countries that Europe rely on for imports have experienced extreme dry weather, and the output available for export has dropped significantly."

"At the same time, China's asparagus production has increased year by year with the increase in planting area in recent years. This has filled the market gap in Europe very well. Since last year, China's frozen asparagus has been in short supply, especially for export. On the market side. According to my prediction, this shortage will intensify after the start of the new season, and frozen asparagus will continue to be a popular product for overseas merchants."

"As a modern operating company integrating planting, production, and sales, the annual supply of quality frozen asparagus can reach 3,000 tons. At this stage, our frozen vegetables are mainly exported to European countries via Qingdao Port."
