

One thousand tons of frozen vegetables leave the port of Cartagena for the United States

Detail Introduction :

A thousand tons of frozen vegetables have left the port of Cartagena for Savannah, United States, in the first shipment of a series that the Murcian company Fruveco plans to export to the North American country, which is destined for one of the most important supermarket chains from this country.

In the words of the president of the Port Authority, Yolanda Muñoz, "the load by the Cartagena stevedore company, Daniel Gómez Servicios Portuarios, has been a complete success since the flexibility of the operations of the Port of Cartagena makes the cargo is carried out in the shortest time possible and at the best price, making our port the most competitive in Spain."

Fruveco is specialized in the production of frozen vegetables. The company has two manufacturing centers, one in El Real and the other in Alhama de Murcia, equipped with innovative technology and close to the production areas to guarantee the freshness of all the products they process. The firm is a European leader in broccolis and onion rings.
